BLOOMINGTON, Ind., June 5 .-The Earlham and DePauw teams were the winners in the preliminary games in the Indiana intercollegiate tennis tournament held in the Indiana university courts yesterday afternoon. The Quakers had little trouble in winning from Rose Poly, shutting out the Scientists in the second game. The Butler team outclassed Indiana, the crimson getting but two sets in the second game.

The semi-finals proved the most interesting. Cornelius, the Indianapolis boy, who represented DePauw, put up an excellent game, playing the net to fine form. The finals in doubles will be played off today. Re-

Banquet at Florence Hall Tomorrow Night-Officers From the East Will Install the Chapter Tomor-

Among the festivities which crowd he commencement days is to be numbered the celebration of the Delta Delta Delta sorority. All Tri-Delt girls are wearing the colors today and their silver, blue and gold are in evidence at their rooms. Tomorrow night at Florence Hall they will celebrate with a banquet. On Saturday or Monday their officers from the East will be here for the installation ceremonies.

The history of Delta Alpha dates back to the organization of P. X. Y. Q. a club of nine in January 1903. Near the beginning of the second term of the school year 1903-04 it was decided to take a Greek name and Delta Alpha was the one chosen. After having received letters from everal sororities they decided to petition Delta Delta Delta and a charter was granted June 5, '08 after three years of hard work.

FACT VS. RANT.

While the press of Indiana was complimenting Thomas R. Marshal for the dignified and argumentative qualities of his speech at Richmond Attorney-General Bingham was making himself ridiculous in a speech of the old time bombastic style. This seemed to have, as its aim, to see how many misstatements could be made in a loud voice in a given time. It is now almost out of date, and we are surprised that any man pretending to common sense, if not to common honesty, should revive it. Surely any thinking man, Republican or Democrat, must have been disgusted with the speech made by Mr. Bingham at Brazil yesterday From first to last, where the speech was not easily proven misstatement, it was rediculous theory, without either fact or argument as backing. As a sample of the misstatement Bingham declared that Sam Ralston's name was withdrawn from the Democratic State Convention without Ralston's knowledge. Now the whole state knows that Ralston himself announced his withdrawal from the platform. The following is a sample of the bombastic rot that was dished out to Clay County Republicans. We have not yet learned whether they swallowed the mess, or whether they resented the insult offered their intelligence.

"In 1893 the Democrats got into power, and then what happened? Well, it was a plenty. tempted to put discarded policies of the Republicans into operation and they wouldn't work. The Democrats have been wrong all along and they can't get right until they vote the Republican ticket. We have no use for a Democratic party. There can be only one party right and the Re publican party is always right. What we need is to get together.'

One of the first things learned in the common schools in the rhetoric classes is that assertions without proof is not argument. And yet we have here columns of such mouth-

A WOMAN OF QUICK WIT.

Susan B. Anthony Never Lacked a Ready Reply.

Few lives so lend themselves to dramatic narration as Susan B. Anthony's, says the Delineator. It ranged from tragedy to comedy, with scattered bits of melodrama, she ever in the center of the stage. With her everything was always intensely realistic-not acting. Miss Anthony had a peculiar faculty of condensing a whole speech into a single sentence. For instance, when she heard men lamenting that the profession of teacher was not respected as much as the other professions, "Do you not see that so long as society says woman has not brains enough to be a doctor, lawyer or minister, but has plenty to be a teacher, every man of you who condescends to teach tacitly admits before all Israel and the sun that he has no more brains than a woman?" And when Horace Greeley said to her at Albany, "You know the ballot and bullet go together-if you vote, are you ready to fight?" instantly she retorted, "Yes, Mr. Greeley, just as you fought in the late war-at the point of a goose quill!" Again, when she was talking on divorce and the Rev. A. D. Mayo, thinking to annihilate her, said, "You are not married; you have no business to be discussing marriage,' "Well, Mr. Mayo," she answered, "you are not a slave; suppose you quit lecturing on slavery!"

Origin of Blackguard.

In the olden times there were attached to all great houses a number of dirty dependents, whose office it was to attend upon the more menial services of the establishment. Of these the most degraded were selected to carry coal to the kitchen. They were mixed up with the pots and kettles and in derison were called the "Black Guards." Naturally the speech and action of Our prices are the lowest. Kindly these unfortunates were anything but immaculate, and their name thus came to be applied to their like generally .-

When a Man Is Graceful.

Men should go early to a party, even if they have to go before supper and sit in the parlor all alone while the hostess is dressing. If a man is late, he is taken around a circle of about forty persons and introduced to every one of them, and there is nothing more awkward than when a man tries to bow. Every one in the room stops talking and stares at him, and if there are any sixteen-year-old girls present he can hear a suppressed giggle when he is trying his best to be graceful. A man is never graceful except when he is sawing wood or hammering a nail. and society should never expect him to bow like a woman who has spent years learning how to handle her feet and hands .- Atchison Globe.

Wanted a Bargain.

One day a small Cincinnati boy came to a halt before a sign over a desk in the office of the express company. It gave the rate for money orders, and after studying it for a few minutes he walked up to the cashier and said bold-

"I want a money order." "How large a one, my boy?" the elerk inquired benignantly. "Well, let's see," pondered the little fellow. "The rate for a ten dollar order is 8 cents, isn't it?"

"Yes; that's right." "Well, I want a drum and pair of oller skates and a new straw hat and some candy. Ten dollars will be

Then he fished through his pockets and triumphantly placed a nickel and three coppers before the astonished clerk. It took ten minutes to convince the youngster that nothing less than $10.08 could buy a money order for $10.-St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Didn't Give Him a Chance.

"Say, ma," piped up little Johnny and taken his departure, "when Mr. Meeker was here every time you stopped talkin' a minute he would start in to say somethin' an' git as fur every time as 'I dare say,' an' then you would start goin' ag'in an' talk a lot more. an' that is the way it kept on right along, an' the only thing he said all the time he was here was 'I dare say,' 'I dare say,' every few minutes.'

"Well, what of it? I am not to blame for Mr. Meeker's paucity of ideas, am I?" demanded Johnny's mother, somewhat impatiently.

"I dunno 'bout that," said Johnny doubtfully, as if not exactly sure what was meant by paucity of ideas, "but anyhow, ma, you orter give him a chanst. When he started in with 'I dare say,' why didn't you keep quiet jest once, ma, an' let him go ahead an' say what he was goin' to an' have it over with?"-St. Paul Pioneer Press.

A Chapel on a Bridge.

At St. Ives, the little old Huntingdonshire town in which Oliver Cromwell lived for several years, there is a bridge spanning the lazily flowing Ouse, and on this bridge is a quaint building which at one time did duty as of the tomb and pick up the money .- a chapel. A POOR GROCER.

Audubon's Lame Attempt to Succeed as a Merchant,

It is not generally remembered that the worldwide reputation of Audubon as a naturalist incidentally is due to his failure to establish himself permanently as a Missouri grocery merchant and dealer in the best brands of Ken-

In 1810 he and Ferdinand Rozier of St. Genevieve loaded a keel boat at Louisville, Ky., with 310 barrels of whisky and groceries and started down the Ohio and Mississippi to St. Genevieve to open a grocery store. The trip was made during the winter, and the streams were so full of ice that the boat was drawn up against the bank and winter quarters were established just below Cape Girardeau. When St. Genevieve was reached, after the openments. Having lost his only sot by did a prosperous business. But the business was done by Rozier, for Audubon preferred the woods to the counter and devoted more of his time to sketching and stuffing birds than he did to marketing the 310 barrels of Kentucky bourbon or any other groceries. This led to a dissolution of the partnership. On April 11, 1811, Audubon, convinced of his unfitness for business, sold out to Rozier and took up the work for which he was better fitted than any one who had lived before or who has lived since and from a fourth rate grocer became the great ornithologist. The grocery business which Audubon abandoned grew until finally it "extended throughout all of and perhaps a few days more at their upper Louisiana."-Kansas City Star.

In Her Moment of Weakness.

By CECILY ALLEN.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

She had always been distressingly capable and competent.

"I don't believe Beatrice ever had neadache or a nervous spell like you girls have," Henry Dalton had remarked one day to his two sisters, absorbed by bonbons and new novels and wrapped in indifference and silk negligees. And the tone in which he spoke was not entirely complimentary. In fact, a distinct note of personal injury rang an attitude of protective chivalry toward a girl entirely capable of doing for herself?

Beatrice never dropped her fan or her handkerchief, nor came into the ed to have demanded of Henry Dalton since he had risen to the dignity of knickerbockers.

Yet withal Beatrice Craig was nothng if not feminine. She wore the softest and most clinging of fabrics. She played golf, but did not court bare arms and tan. She wore tailored suits.

And if all these things she was be fore her father's failure and death she was doubly inaccessible and impregnaole after reverses overtook her. Beand will be placed in the jail hos- fore that she had simply fenced with pital until arrangements can be Dalton. Now she donned an armor

Directly the estate was settled up lis. He is 38 years old and has a and the smallness of their inheritance was made known to her Beatrice Craig had turned breadwinner, investing the pitiful little heritage in a smart shop where layettes of the most superlative ineness and beauty were sold.

In the front room, with its exquisite fittings and scented presses, she exhibited wares selected to suit the matrons among whom she had grown from girlhood to womanhood. In the rear room she gathered the most expert needlewomen her purse could command, and all work was done under her direct supervision.

Her delighted clientele said that her success was founded on this personal oversight. Her doctor said that nervous prostration would inevitably result from her persistent close confinement to business. Her mother wept in sheer oneliness at first and later drifted from their tiny apartment back into the old bridge playing, novel reading fircle of gray haired friends. And what Henry Dalton said is not for repetition here, for, having no nieces or nephews, how could be offer a decent excuse for haunting a layette shop? And only at her shop was Beatrice to be found-save the cruelly few ours when outraged nature demanded rest and refreshment.

And now today, with Henry Dalton thrust into the dim background of the life when her mother made all things ovely for her well shod feet to walk upon, she was standing before her cheval mirror preparing for a returnjust a brief return glimpse-to the old

Her mother had wept to some puroose. The doctor had said certain sharp things that were more effective than maternal tears, and so Beatrice had accepted the De Haven Smiths' warm invitation to spend the week end lodge in the Catskills.

Beatrice surveyed with critical eye her smartly tailored traveling suit and "Ho, there, Jilkins, have you got then cast a smiling glance at the suit change for a twenty?" asked Van case where rested a delightful matinee, product of her own workroom. It would be good to lie abed mornings and drink her chocolate in a love of a matinee like that. And she should read a couple of new books and wear the white crepe de chine, newly made over for the trip, to dinner. Old times yes, she was strong enough now to stand an occasional dip back into old

"Yes, mother, there's a roll of bills in my bag, the large pocket. Take what you think will last you until I come back." An hour later Beatrice leaned back luxuriously in the parlor car, her unseeing eyes fixed on the Hudson panorama. It was good-just to do nothing. And when the call for luncheon came she felt hungry-and smiled. The doctor had said a change was all she needed, and here she was hungry already for the first time in weeks.

The obsequious darky in charge of her table gave her the perfection of service, with one eye perhaps on the beautiful pigskin hand bag that rested against the window. That bag had been one of Dalton's gifts, and at that very moment the giver himself was sitting at a table behind Beatrice, watching her every move with hungry eyes. He knew that she was going to the De Haven Smith lodge. Mrs. Smith had boldly held this out as a bait in his invitation, but somehow he felt that the psychological moment for making his presence known had not yet arrived. He noted sometimes a new droop in her shoulders. Occasionally, too, she leaned her head on her hand between courses. This was the reaction which the doctor had predicted, but Henry Dalton did not know this. He thought only that she was slowly but surely killing herself by reason of her pride, and he must stand idly. dumbly by simply because he was so disgustingly rich that she would not

And upon these bitter thoughts rush ed the psychological moment.

Miss Beatrice Craig, the independent and competent, opened her hand bag. the darky keenly observant, and slipped her hand into the large pocket. Her finger tips touched naught but polished leather. She tried the small pocket and drew forth some cards. She sat up very straight and dipped into her change purse to find a dime, a quarter and an old German coin, souvenir of Henry Dalton's student days in Ber-

Her face turned scarlet, then white. A horrible nervous tremor swept over her. Frantically she turned everything out of the bag to find almost anything a businesslike yet distinctly feminine person might own except money.

Like a flash she remembered her mother's request. She had kept it all, every penny of the flatly folded bills. "Take what you think will last you until I come back.

Fateful words! Beatrice sent for the dining car conductor and explained the situation. He was polite, but behind the mask of courtesy she read amusement, or was it distrust?

She became haughty. "My host will meet me at the depot. Until then-well, here are my rings or my watch"-The darkles had gathered at the table opposite Henry Dalton with heads together, lips parted in ironical smiles. He summoned his waiter sharply.

"Anything happened to the lady?" "Seems like she ain't got the price of

Just at the instant Henry Dalton ose precipitately. Beatrice came down the aisle, her head high, but her face ghastly. It was not the attitude of the conductor nor the grinning darkies, but a sudden faintness, a realization that for once her business ability, her supreme tact, her resourcefulness, had failed her. She did not read this as physical exhaustion. Her one grim thought was that she had lost her grip on herself.

And then came Henry Dalton with a hand outstretched and the love of her shining in his eyes.

"Beatrice, I am the most fortunate

"Oh, Henry," she said, with a queer break in her clear voice, "will you

Henry Dalton carried her back to the stateroom in the parlor car. Henry Dalton took firm possession of her luggage and firm control of the situation. Henry Dalton all but lifted her into the De Haven Smith wagonette when they left the train. And Henry Dalton read the telegram, for which he paid, though it was sent C. O. D. to Beatrice Craig.

"Forgot to put money back in purse What shall I do with it?"

"Buy flowers for yourself-everybody," wired Henry Dalton to the first amazed and then understanding mother of Beatrice. "I am taking care of Beatrice and always shall."

And that was why the smartest layette shop in all New York passed to a new owner and love came into its own.

Ants and the Weather.

"When you go out on a cloudy morning and find the ants busily engaged in clearing out their nests and dragging the sand and bits of earth to the surface, you may be sure that, no matter how cloudy it is, there will be no rain that day, and the probabilities are for several days of good weather," says a gardener.

"On the other hand, if you see the ants about the middle of a spring or summer afternoon hurrying back to the nest and a sentinel out trotting round in every direction looking up stragglers and urging them to go home as soon as they can get there you may figure on a rain that afternoon or night. When the last of the wanderers is found the picket hurries in, and the nest is securely sealed from the inside to keep out the water. It is very seldom that ants are taken by surprise by the approach of a shower, but once in awhile when belated or too far away to get home in time they mount a shrub and ensconce themselves under the thickest, broadest leaf they can find, and there they stay and hold on until the rain is over. When an ants' nest is washed out and the ants drown an examination will always show that the disaster was due not so much to lack of preparation as to accident, a stream from an unexpected direction flowing down between two bricks or a downpour that caused a fall or the washing away of the bank in which the nest was placed."

Dangerous Ground.

"Bless me, Marthy!" exclaimed Uncle Cyrus, looking up from his magazine, says the Youth's Companion "We're getting a navy that don't need to take a back seat for any of them European nations." Aunt Martha congredients of "mountain" cake and metry of two peeled pears." manifestly was not unduly excited over naval affairs.

"Mercy sakes," cried Aunt Martha with arrested spoon, for the first time impressed with these interesting statistics, "I hope to goodness our cavalry 'll keep away from the shore!"

The tuppenny tube, London's subway, once set fire to a house in a manner so extraordinary as to merit attention. In a mansion beneath which runs the subterranean railway one of the bedroom fireplaces was fitted with a blower-a sheet of iron inside the grate which can be raised or lowered to regulate the draft. The blower rest. ed on a series of Iron notches. One afternoon a servant kindled a fire in the grate and when it was well alight raised the blower, so that the coal would burn but slowly, and so left it while she went downstairs. Presently deep in the clay beneath the foundations of the house, a train rushed along. The vibrations from its passing were sufficient to jar the blower from the notches on which the servant had left it. It dropped down. The draft increased; the fire raged madly. The flames were enough to set the chimney on fire, burning soot set the water tank on the roof alight, and there resulted a considerable configration.-Pittsburg

A Girl and a Snake. It is a matter of fact that men have greater fear of serpents than have women. During a visit to friends in the country I was crossing a stretch of meadow in the company of my hostess' daughter, a sprightly girl of seventeen when a black snake crossed the path ten feet in front of us. I caught my companion by the sleeve, but sh wrenched herself loose, gathered her skirts about her knees, gave a running jump and landed squarely upon the back of the reptile. His snakeship thrashed the grass and the girl's ankles with equal futility. As soon as she could disengage one foot she planted it upon the serpent's head. In the ab sence of club or stones I was com pelled to stand and witness a scen that to me was terrifying, but to the girl furnished supreme enjoyment Years afterward when I read Hag gard's description of Jess' fight with the kangaroo I understood the kind o entertainment that my young compar ion had provided for me.-Brooklyn

There's a Hare In the Moon.

Equally famous with the man in th moon and the woman in the moon the hare in the moon, says Garrett F Serviss in his "Astronomy With the Naked Eye." The original is a Bud dhist legend. The god Sakkria, dis guised as a Brahman, pretended to be starving and went to the animals for help. The monkey got him a bunch of mangoes; the coot picked up a fisher man's neglected string for him: the fox stole him a pot of milk. At last the god approached the hare. "I have nothing but grass," said the hare, "an you can't eat that." "But your flesh is good," suggested the pretended Brahman. The hare assented. "Then," said the Brahman, "I'll kindle a fire at th foot of this rock, and you jump off into it. That'll save me the trouble of kil ing you." The hare assented again but as he leaped from the rock the goo caught him in his arms and then drey his figure in the moon as a perpetus reminder of the excellence of self sac

A Quaint English Ceremony.

On the last day of each October the city- solicitor of London, with an assistant, attends upon the royal remem brancer, when by proclamation "the tenants and occupiers of a piece of waste ground called the moors, in the county of Salop," are commanded to come forth and do your service upon pain and peril that shall fall thereon. The solicitor chops in halves two fag ots, one with a hatchet and the other with a billhook. Afterward comes the summons to the tenants, etc., of "a certain tenement with a forge" in the Strand and the payment of six horse shoes, with sixty-one shoe nails, by the solicitor. This forge has long ceased to be, and the same shoes and nails are used year after year, the shoes be ing at least two centuries old.

Brancon and a second Which Was Richter?

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.] In the year 1883 there lived at Konis berg, Germany, a single man named Albert Richter. He was at that time twenty-eight years old and had considerable landed property. Richter was a quiet, retiring man, respectable and honest and well liked, and at the date we give was keeping company with a young woman. They quarreled about something, and he suddenly disappeared. He was living with his mother, and it was shown that he got up about midnight and left the house. That was the last to be seen of him for many a year.

As Richter had no brothers or sisters the government took charge of his property after one year and held it in trust, while a reward of $200 was offered for information concerning him.

When five years had passed and not a thing had been heard of the missing Richter he suddenly appeared at his home-that is, a man claiming to be he appeared. He entered the house one evening, hung up his hat on the same old hook and then turned and embraced his mother. He used to be clean shaven. Now he had whiskers. That was the only difference the mother detected. He was welcomed as her long lost son, and of all the people who came to see him no one questioned his identity. Richter claimed that he had gone away to America because of the quarrel with the girl, who was now married. The government was notified of his return, and steps were being taken to return his property when something happened. The wife whom he had quarreled with as a girl came back to her old home on a visit. When she heard that her old lover was home again of course she wanted to see him. He dodged a meeting as long as possible, but it came about at length. After the meeting the woman said she doubted the identity of the person. Other people began to wonder, and finally the mother was the only one that did not doubt. The government took the matter in hand, and Richter was forced to submit to an examination. It was the woman with whom he had quarreled that wrought his downfall. He stated the cause of the quarrel, and he repeated some of the words that had passed between them, but he could not describe the interior of her father's house. He could not tell how many who had even fooled the mother of the missing man was pronounced an impostor and sent to jail for trial, and in the end he got fifteen years in prison. Just two years after his exposure another Richter turned up. He walked into the house as cool as you please, and almost the first question he asked was about Katrina, the girl he had quarreled with. He inquired after twenty different persons, made his way about the house as if he had been born in it, and the mother rather reluctant ly accepted him for what he claimed to be. There were four persons on the farm that had been employed there This Richter greeted them all by name as they approached him to shake hands. One of them had lost a child by accident about the time Richter went away. This man referred to it and gave the particulars. For a week the mother watched him becomes loosened and enters the rapid and asked questions, and at last she was satisfied and accepted him. Most of the neighbors did the same, but there was one man that set a trap for him. The woman who had exposed the other had now immigrated to America. This Richter claimed that he had force of the blood current back of the been in England all the time, running a truck garden near Manchester. In the next village to Konisberg was a young man who had passed three years in a German mercantile house in Manchester. He was got to come over and question Richter, who claimed to be very familiar with the town. The rascal's downfall soon came. He could not name five streets. In fact, he could tell no more of the city than any one who had given it a careless glance on the map. He tried to bluff it out, but the government officials were notified. No. 10 F. Lick & Laf. When questioned by the mother he gave many correct answers, and two of the four employees of the farm were ready to declare that he was the real Albert Richter when the fellow's nerve failed him, and he disappeared before he could be arrested It was plan enough to the people that the three impostors had seen and talked with Richter. In fact, they must have been chums of his to find out what they had. Six months after the disappearance of the third impostor the real Richter returned, but it was to be looked upon as a rascal. His mother had become so frightened that she dared not say whether he was the real son or not. All said that he looked the same as when he went away, but he did not act quite the same. He was more silent and morose. The government officials questioned him; they had the others, but he could not be trapped. He stated that he had gone away because of his wretchedness and had at last brought up in South Africa. It was there that he had met the other men and, sitting around campfires, had told them of his home. One of them had been his comrade for fourteen months.

The mother and the neighbors were satisfied that the man before them was times. the true Albert Richter, but the government wasn't. A BURMESE RAT TRAP. JAPANESE PAGODAS.

The Rodents Will Eagerly Enter It and Cannot Get Out.

Rats may readily be induced to jump or drop into any receptacle, especially if it affords them adequate conceal ment, and they do this without one lingering suspicion of their inability to reach the only existing outlet when the time for retreat approaches.

Thus traps on this principle may readily be designed and are obviously preferable to our rat traps where the animals are numerous.

In Burma, where the rats are a perfect pest, they use a jar trap, which is thus described by a traveler:

"The common Pegu jar I used was about one and a half or two feet deep and fourteen or fifteen inches broad. and a hole was punched in the shoulder just large enough for a rat to enter.

"There was about six or seven inches of paddy (rice in busk) in the jar, which was then buried to within about eight inches of the top. The mouth of the jar was then closed with a board and a stone.

"A quantity of old timber joists and straw were in the outhouse and no end of rat holes everywhere around."

With this contrivance he caught sev enty-two rats in one night. The rats ean readily enter, but they cannot climb the smooth sides of the jar to escape.-London Family Herald.

A FIREPROOF TREE.

On the vast plains of Colombia and the north of South America, called saexcept during the rainy season, there is one of the greatest of natural curiosities, a tree called the chaparro, which is fireproof.

It is the custom of the Colombian herdsmen to clear the ground by means of fire for the new vegetation, which springs up so luxuriantly in these regions after the rainy season. But not even the intense heat of a prairie fire affects the chaparro tree. It survives the flames to afford a welcome shade in an otherwise treeless

It is a small tree, seldom growing to more than twenty feet in height, with a girth of about three feet. It owes its curious immunity from fire to the nature of its hard, thick bark. The bark lies on the trunk in loose layers, which do not readily conduct heat to the more delicate parts of the

The natives believe that this tree grows only where gold is abundant in the soil below, and it certainly is common in auriferous districts.-Westminster Gazette.

False Hair.

False hair was first regularly worn in England by Queen Elizabeth, who had upward of fifty wigs of different kinds for her private use. After her death a few women adopted the French fashion of wearing wigs, but it was not until the restoration that wigs, or, more correctly speaking, periwigs, came to be extensively worn by the sterner sex. These were introduced in the court of Louis XIV., where a natural head of hair was not considered sufficiently luxuriant for the artificial tastes of the times. The term "periwig" is a corruption of the French perruque. Wigs were originally adopted not as a remedy for baldness, but in the interest of personal cleanliness. The laws of ancient Egypt compelled all males to shave the head and beard. This explains why turbans were not worn by the Egyptians, the bushy artificial hair being regarded as a sufficient protection against the heat of the sun. The Romans, on the contrary, wore wigs because they were naturally bald.—St. Louis Republic.
